To the Common Council of the City of Fort Wayne:

Gentlemen:

I have been reviewing the various laws pertaining to riots, tumultous conduct of threats to property, curfew, and the like. From this review, there are several facts which can be stated. First, no law that I can find specifically defines a curfew or specifically defines or authorizes a curfew under conditions the ordinance is intended to cover. This power is generally implied from the police powers granted to cities to make regulations in the event of conduct threatening life or property. This power to impose curfew is also implied in the general powers given to the city to take all necessary steps to carry out the specific powers granted to the city. In this case, the specific powers involve suppression of insurrection, riot and tumultous conduct and the like.

The regulations imposed are subject to the requirement that they must be reasonable. From this requirement, the legal department is of the opinion that it authorizes the restrictions to be placed on the entire community or upon only parts of it, if that is all that appears reasonably necessary. In other words, there is no specific authority to impose a curfew on only parts of the city, or for that matter, on the city as a whole. The authority is only to impose reasonable regulations in the event of serious threat to life or property.

I might also add that the case law in this particular field is rather limited. It appears as though the various curfew regulations imposed from time to time throughout the country have not been seriously challenged. One of the leading cases found, however, involved the Milwaukee curfew, which was imposed upon the entire community and was accordingly challenged. In this case, the authority of the mayor was upheld by the Court.

Under the laws I interpreted, either the last ordinance which we'll refer to as the "curfew ordinance", and the original ordinance as amended under the designation of Bill No. 71-01-13, appear to be valid and within the jurisdiction of the city, though neither adds anything to the powers which already exist. The first amendment to the original ordinance does have the additional safety feature that it provides for calling the members of the Council as soon as practical after the emergency is declared, and providing that five members of the Council may rescind or modify the regulations.

I don't know of anything further that I can add at this time by way of suggestion or by way of review of the ordinances previously submitted.

Sincerely,

Robert E. Meyers
Associate City Attorney
